“ As we reflect on many years and memories that we enjoyed with you, we remember your loving kindness and a mother who gave us your heart, love, and support. We celebrate you for all that you shared with us as a loving mother. We miss you everyday and will love you always.

“ I was closing an email account when I received the celebration of life news four days ago. I have ripped my mind to shreds trying to find the perfect words to share. My grandmother and I went a few rounds on the best way to introduce children into a world of unknowns and she definitely got the last word every time. Grandma's handwriting was majestic and full of consolation. If I don't end these words now, I'll be writing her an essay all over again with more apologies than can be counted. I drove around grandma's home every time I visited the area just to take a break from a career in technology. My son loved you, he just was anxious to return to that playstation. I'm doing the one thing that I know you would have been glad to know, and that is to love myself and take care of myself first. Grandma, your kids were wonderful and I'm glad to have met them. I'm still a Christian and I love Jesus so I'll be around, not sure how long but I'll be around.
