“ He landed upon my threshold quite by accident one frosty autumn day as he was in search of a place to call home. Brought in by a mutual friend, he seemed sincere when he claimed he could offer assistance when needed and would present no problem. Would I allow him to remain? I consented. Little did I realize what a whirlwind I brought into my home and my life when Mr. Toodie set roots down and around us. We all became familiar with that quick, infectious smile of his. It warms a person's toes if ever directly gazed full face. And, I found it refreshing how the smallest quirks would tickle him. He actually chuckled at times. He had the gift of gab alright as I was soon convinced he could talk a blind man out of his seeing eye dog, an atheist to open his heart to Almighty God and a spendthrift into giving up his last dime. It was that note and gleam of sincerity that he aimed at another - eye to eye - which felt so much like it arrived heart to heart. And, he was HEART. Be a troubled friend, a shoeless child, manifest a broken soul, and PRESTO there he was where needed to help til the pains of this world subsided. I will miss you Mr. Toodie. I will miss that endearing naive bit of your person you seldom showed others. I will miss you calling me 2nd Mom as though you had crowned me with a special title and that single red rose you brought me picked fresh from our front yard. I will miss that front door opening up at ungodly hours and you looking like you needed a soft place to land. I will miss the fires you built me to stave off a winter chill and you asking, "What have you eaten today?" What will fill my tomorrows? Can't I be selfish just a bit longer and question the wisdom of your leaving us? Doesn't the Almighty know how we've learned to need you in our everyday? Can't we be selfish just a little more and hold tight? Can we cry a little more? Just a few more tears? It is time. As much as I wish, want, desire, there will be no more memories built. It is time to let him pass to happier ground. Go Home, Toodie. I will stay strong in your leaving because I know that would have been your wish. Go Home to those that await you. I will be coming soon. In the meantime, your memory lives in my heart. And, I won't be selfish any longer. I can say goodbye.

Toodie fresh. The day I met you was the day that I knew I had me a great friend and we have always trusted and depended on one another in time we shared. We often fought like brothers and sisters but we both knew what we meant to each other thur the hearts. I will cherish the moments we shared together and I feel much better knowing you are with our father in heaven because you and I discussed the bible and we prayed to our heavenly father together and that will be the moment I cherish the most. Tudie I will miss you dearly and know I love you very much . you are a genuine human being that I'm so proud became a part of my life. I could just hear ur laughter in heaven.
